How & Who

Madder Series

The journey of each table cloth starts from a tiny cotton seed. These tablecloths fabric, 'kala cotton' is handspun and handwoven from an indigenous variety of cotton plant that is native to the kutch region of Gujarat. Once woven the fabric is then printed with a traditional style of block printing called Ajrakh. Ajrakh uses hand carved wooden blocks to print natural dyes on organic cotton.

The process of making an Ajrakh is a long one, involving around fifteen distinct steps. The many processes of scouring, washing, printing, dyeing, and final washing can take up to three weeks to complete. Much of the beauty and depth of Ajrakh cloth comes from the intricacy of the imprint that is left by the artisan's hand. Slight variations are to be celebrated.

About Piece

The journey of each quilt starts from a tiny cotton seed. The base fabric, 'kala cotton' is handspun and handwoven from an indigenous variety of cotton plant that is native to the kutch region of Gujarat. Once woven the fabric is then quilted with layers of cotton fabric for insulation and hand embroidered and assembled in Ahmedabad region of Gujarat. A cluster of women hand stitch this with the of women hand stitch this with the kantha(running) stitch in the godadi(quilt) making technique which is native to this region. This product is made without the use of any machine intervention. The handmade aspect leads to some slubs and embroidery irregularities which we celebrate.
